Reseachers from universities in Germany and Brazil, together with experts from INACH and other local entities, have been studying the Grey Glacier since 2015.

What was lost and what survived devastating Notre Dame fire

David K. Li

Some of the most prized, centuries-old relics of France and Christianity survived the devastating Notre Dame Cathedral fire that almost wiped out the cherished Paris landmark.

According to Culture Minister Frank Riester the "most precious treasures" were largely spared. Many of the works will be stored at Paris' City Hall and the Louvre, where they will be examined, treated for damage and protected.

Monday's fire almost destroyed the entire cathedral, which has stood in Paris and survived nearly 900 years of tumultuous French history.

So far, authorities have said blaze appears to be an accident, possibly connected to a renovation project carried out by five companies.

The fire was finally extinguished after nine hours of work.

Asthma from traffic

Asthma is a serious medical condition because it is lifelong; there is no cure. A study says that pollution from traffic connects to 4 millions new cases of asthma in children each year.

Researchers studied the pollution and how it affects children's health in 194 countries and 125 large cities.

This is not the first study to make this claim, but the study's main author says that it gives a comprehensive idea of the problem. She says that it tells where pollution "hot spots" are.

Some people think rules for pollution need to change and that we need to have cleaner transportation. The author also said that there are other pollutants in the world causing diseases, such as lung cancer, strokes, heart disease and developmental issues.

According to the text, we can say that _____.

- a) there is no solution for the problems caused by pollution

The plane, the pilot and the mechanic.

Whereas, several test pilots might fly the prototype, each prototype is entrusted to only one mechanic. For him, I'm the pilot who is going to fly "his" plane and furnish him with the proof that the work he has lovingly and conscientiously put it on it all day, and sometimes all night, has not been in vain. The relation between the pilot, the plane and the mechanic are at once very simple – basic, obviously – and very complex when it comes to putting them into words. For the mechanic, the plane is a kind of Sleeping Beauty, and he takes care of her and cuddles her while she is asleep. As soon as she wakes up, she passes into the hands of the pilots, but he only knows the plane when it is "alive", when it is flying and functioning. The moment the plane takes off for a test, the mechanic loses sight of it, but he follows it, he feels it, he is bound to it by a kind of sixth sense, or to put it better, by an invisible umbilical cord.

Preliminary data recovered from the black boxes of the last week Ethiopian Airlines crash has revealed "similarities" to October 's fatal Lion Air crash.

Ethiopian Airlines flight 302 crashed March 10, six minutes after take off, killing all 157 people on board. It was the second disaster involving a new Boeing 737 Max 8 aircraft in less than six months. In October, all 189 people on board Lion Air Flight were killed in Indonesia, 13 minutes after take off. Similarities between the two incidents led aviation authorities around the world to ban the use of 737 Max 8s. Investigators suspect the Lion Air crash may have been caused by an angle of attack sensor on the outside of the plane that transmitted incorrect data, which could have triggered the automated flight software that forced the plane's nose down. The pilots first manually corrected an "automatic aircraft nose down two minutes after take off and performed the same procedure again and again before the plane hurtled into the Java Sea.

- a) the crashes were caused by a mechanical problem in the nose gear.
- b) many people survived in both accidents and this fact was considered a miracle
- c) the pilots tried to find a solution to the problem using their own hands in the automatic aircraft.

On 14 February 2019, Airbus announced their A380s have been cancelled, with production ending in 2021. After 12 years of shaky business and development, its closure didn't come as a surprise. The dream is over for the world's largest passenger airliner. Why was the king of the airliners forced to land so quickly? Here's what happened:

- poor business planning finds itself at the heart of the A380's downfall. Most of all A380's eggs were put in a basket called Emirates, Airbus biggest buyer.
- bigger isn't always better. With a wingspan of almost 80 meters was difficult to guide the giant four-turbine around airports.
- airbus failed to anticipate how consumer's tastes in air travel would change over the years. Passengers nowadays prefer smaller airports, using direct routes to their destinations.
- although a seating capacity of 800 may seem impressive at first, it is not easy to fill them up, even when you give discounts and make promotions.

Airbus A380's closure perhaps teaches us all a lesson or two. Dream big, but keep your feet on the ground.

Adapted from <https://www.slashgerar.com>.

In "...Most of all the A380's eggs were put in a basket called Emirates(...)", we can infer that Airbus _____.

- a) is the Emirates' best customer
- b) have no other alternative left if Emirates fails

- c) made investments on the open market for many years
 d) put most of their efforts into Emirates, but have another plans to get success

What was lost and what survived devastating Notre Dame fire

David K. Li

Some of the most prized, centuries-old relics of France and Christianity survived the devastating Notre Dame Cathedral fire that almost wiped out the cherished Paris landmark.

According to Culture Minister Frank Riester the "most precious treasures" were largely spared. Many of the works will be stored at Paris' City Hall and the Louvre, where they will be examined, treated for damage and protected.

Monday's fire almost destroyed the entire cathedral, which has stood in Paris and survived nearly 900 years of tumultuous French history.

So far, authorities have said blaze appears to be an accident, possibly connected to a renovation project carried out by five companies.

The fire was finally extinguished after nine hours of work.

Investigators find "similarities" between Ethiopian and Lion Air crashes.

Preliminary data recovered from the black boxes of the last week Ethiopian Airlines crash has revealed "similarities" to October 's fatal Lion Air crash.

Ethiopian Airlines flight 302 crashed March 10, six minutes after take off, killing all 157 people on board. It was the second disaster involving a new Boeing 737 Max 8 aircraft in less than six months. In October, all 189 people on board Lion Air Flight were killed in Indonesia, 13 minutes after take off. Similarities between the two incidents led aviation authorities around the world to ban the use of 737 Max 8s. Investigators suspect the Lion Air crash may have been caused by an angle of attack sensor on the outside of the plane that transmitted incorrect data, which could have triggered the automated flight software that forced the plane's nose down. The pilots first manually corrected an "automatic aircraft nose down two minutes after take off and performed the same procedure again and again before the plane hurtled into the Java Sea.
