Questão 10: DIRENS Aeronáutica - CFS (EEAR)/EEAR/Controle de Tráfego Aéreo/2016

The U2 was one of _____ military planes of the Cold War. It was designed to fly high over a foreign country, take pictures and gather information.

The U2 was built in Area 51, a secret place in Nevada, known for UFO sightings. The US Air Force built the area to create such a secret plane and test new weapons.

 The single-pilot plane could fly at an altitude of over 20 km above the earth's surface. With its special cameras it could take detailed photos and close-ups of objects on the ground. Today, the US Air Force still operates a modified version of the U2, however it is not used as a spy plane any more. Current planes have a larger fuselage and need less fuel than their predecessors of the Cold War. They are also equipped with more sophisticated instruments. Some of them fly over Afghanistan and support American soldiers on the ground. They also saw action during the Gulf War and the conflict in the Balkans.

U2s are also used for research. NASA uses the former spy planes for tests in the atmosphere.

Questão 19: DIRENS Aeronáutica - CFS (EEAR)/EEAR/Controle de Tráfego Aéreo/2016

Why do planes crash?

Navigational errors are among the most common causes of plane crashes. Planes are flown into a mountain or the sea out of a variety of reasons. Sometimes weather conditions are bad, in other cases pilots have made bad judgements.

In 1996 a Peruvian airliner crashed into the sea after the computer stopped working. The crew had almost no data left to work with and didn't know at which height they were flying when they hit the water.

In 1977 almost 600 people got killed when two planes were heading at full speed towards each other and collided in heavy fog on the runway in Tenerife. The crash happened after planes had been guided to Tenerife because Gran Canary airport was closed.

In June 2009 an Air France airbus disappeared off the coast of Brazil. Although the wreckage was found after a few days it took investigators almost three years to find out what had really happened to the plane.

Pilots are criticising the way planes are _____. In the past decades the structure of planes has changed. More computers and automated systems are taking over, the pilot often has no alternatives left.

Questão 31: DIRENS Aeronáutica - CFS (EEAR)/EEAR/Controle de Tráfego Aéreo/2016

Airports 'vunerable' to attack

The 2007 Glasgow International Airport attack was a terrorist ramming attack which occurred on Saturday 30 June 2007, when a dark green Jeep Cherokee loaded with propane canisters was driven into the glass doors of the Glasgow International Airport terminal and set ablaze. It was the first terrorist attack to take place in Scotland. Security bollards outside the entrance stopped the car from entering the terminal, although the doors were damaged.

Security consultant Chris Yates said many of the changes put in place at Glasgow had been copied at other UK airports. But he said that although some "weak points" in airport had been addressed, others remained.

Since the attack, cars no longer drop off passengers outside the main terminal building, which was fitted with bomb-proof glass.

Airports 'vunerable' to attack

The 2007 Glasgow International Airport attack was a terrorist ramming attack which occurred on Saturday 30 June 2007, when a dark green Jeep Cherokee loaded with propane canisters was driven into the glass doors of the Glasgow International Airport terminal and set ablaze. It was the first terrorist attack to take place in Scotland. Security bollards outside the entrance stopped the car from entering the terminal, although the doors were damaged.

Security consultant Chris Yates said many of the changes put in place at Glasgow had been copied at other UK airports. But he said that although some "weak points" in airport had been addressed, others remained.

Since the attack, cars no longer drop off passengers outside the main terminal building, which was fitted with bomb-proof glass.

The Bottom Line on Facebook Depression

Facebook, the most popular social media platform, does not make people more depressed on its own. Instead, what the research shows is that Facebook – when used as a surveillance device – leads to a greater risk of feelings of envy. And the more those feelings of envy increase, the more likely it is for a person to start feeling depressed.

The key to stopping these feelings is to not use Facebook primarily as a surveillance method to spy on your family and friends' lives. Instead, use it as a social network where you share your own information, photos and updates, as well as consume other's updates and shares.

Healthy use of Facebook will protect you against the possibility of feeling more depressed after using it. It's a simple thing you can try for yourself – especially if you feel more envious after checking Facebook.

Reading the text leads to the conclusion that Facebook

- a) may lessen depressive feelings.
- b) alone doesn't cause people to be more depressed.
- c) is a social tool that can help loneliness if it is used in a healthy way.
- d) can lead to unconscious envy that will result in depression feelings.

Why I stopped mispronouncing my Igbo name

In Nigeria, the language spoken by one of the largest ethnic groups, the Igbo, is in danger of dying out – which is odd because the population is growing. In the past this didn't worry Nkem Ifejika, who is himself Igbo but never learned the language.

When he is in Nigeria, he says his parents are Igbo. He might throw in that he partly grew up in the United Kingdom. In Britain,

He says he's Nigerian, though he often adds explainers about having been educated at British schools and lived outside Nigeria since he was 12 years old.

Nkem Ifejika can speak English, French among others. However, he can't speak the language of his ancestors. Igbo is a tonal language, so the words with the wrong stresses and tones either change their meaning, or worse, become unintelligible. In Igboland, as it's informally known, names have meaning and history. Nkemakonam means "may I not lack what is mine", while Ifejika means "what I have is greater". By mispronouncing his names, he was throwing away generation of history, and disregarding his parents' careful choice.

His indefatigable and proudly wife, who is also Igbo, helped him out when they met. Now he knows how to pronounce his name properly, with the correct tones and with pride.
